Self-Acceptance: Many people are initially concerned that they will do something embarrassing while learning about or interacting with the horses. Yet they quickly learn that the other participants are engaged in their own equine experiences, and they observe the comfort of the horses in their own skin. Fears of embarrassment in public are thereby often reduced and self-acceptance increased.